Dear Mr. Bukowski,

Claudia Cornelison

Follow this and additional works at: http://scholarexchange.furman.edu/echo

Part of the Creative Writing Commons, Fine Arts Commons, Illustration Commons, and the Photography Commons

Recommended Citation
Available at: http://scholarexchange.furman.edu/echo/vol2017/iss2017/39
Dear Mr. Bukowski,

I read your poem in school today.
They told me to tell them what it meant.
I politely informed them that I don’t read minds.
I told them they should ask you.
They said you were dead.

They said that it was my job to figure out what you were thinking and why.
They said to look at the rhyme,
the periods, the commas.
They made me count the syllables.
They said to circle words.

So I circled
Of
And For

They said those were the wrong words.

Then the situation became violent.
They took out scissors and knives and shredded up your words,
pasting the bloody parts
all over walls.
My favorite wall, stained with hot word blood,

the poor words
all mangled and ripped apart.
They couldn’t even speak and God knows that words cannot live long if they cannot speak.

I’m sorry Mr. Bukowski.
I’m sorry they did that to your words.
I thought they were nice.