neither so "ignorant" nor so "stupid" as to be caught in the meshes of abolition-know-nothing-ism by any such transparent clap-trap. The effort is a forlorn hope of the factions to sustain their sinking cause, which daily becomes more hopeless of success.

Assault in the United States Senate Chamber.

A telegraphic dispatch of the 22d inst. states that immediately after the adjournment of Congress on that day, Preston S. Brooks, of South Carolina, a member of the lower house, entered the Senate chamber and approached the seat of Mr. Sumner, and struck him a powerful blow with a cane, at the same time accusing him of libelling South Carolina and his gray-bearded relative, Senator Butler. Mr. Sumner fell from the effects of the blow. Mr. Brooks continued beating him. Mr. Sumner recovered sufficiently to call for help, but no one interfered, and Mr. Brooks repeated the blows until Mr. Sumner was deprived of the power of speech. Mr. Sumner received several severe, but not dangerous, wounds on his head. The cane held by Mr. Brooks was shattered to pieces by the blows.

The assault on any account is to be regretted, but when we take into account the provocation, much may be said in palliation of it. All parties confess that Sumner's speech, surpassed in blackguardism anything ever delivered in the Senate. Blinded by rage at being used in debate by his political opponents, he commenced levelling his filth and slime at every senator opposed to him, among whom was the venerable Butler—was not present. Sumner is a young man professes to be a non-belligerent; professes to the world that he does not profess to be a gentleman; claims the right to use just such language as he pleases in the Senate, and out of it, to old men as well as young, without holding himself answerable to any code of honor, or any recognised rules of etiquette, or senatorial courtesy. Pursuant to these assumptions he made a speech against Senator Butler which was never equalled by the lowest pot-house slime.

Mr. Brooks heard the foul mouthed spout through, and being excited by his wholesale falsehoods against his aged and absent uncle, he at once indicted summary chastisement upon the non-combatant seceder. Such scenes are greatly to be regretted. They are disgraceful to the nation; but when such crawling, sneaking reptiles as Sumner assume the shield of non-combatancy in order to establish for themselves the exclusive privilege of violating the laws of the land, such scenes, if they have but half the horror they deserve, must be permitted to befall them, when the inveterate miscreant of the Southern States, in the very senile age of his life, is a danger and a sore to the South.
Logan, Butler, there were the leaders of the party of the Hon. Francis Logan and Sangamon. The speeches of Logan were eloquent and well timed, and the speeches of Butler were equalled only by the eloquent and the timely speeches of Sangamon. The speeches of Logan were delivered with a certainty that the speeches of Butler were equalled only by the eloquent speeches of Sangamon. The speeches of Logan were delivered with a certainty that the speeches of Butler were equalled only by the eloquent speeches of Sangamon. The speeches of Logan were delivered with a certainty that Logan and Sangamon were equalled only by the eloquent speeches of Sangamon. The speeches of Logan were delivered with a certainty that Logan and Sangamon were equalled only by the eloquent speeches of Sangamon.

An old and respected citizen, addressing the people of the city, said:

Entertain no suspicion of the power of the "American" party, but entertain it with the views of public opinion, and be assured that the party, as now constituted, is not only a menace to the nation, but to the Constitution and the Constitution of the United States. It is a menace to the Constitution and the Constitution of the United States. It is a menace to the Constitution and the Constitution of the United States.

The Thing Arranged.

Washington, April 12th, 1861. The House Committee on elections reported a resolution on that day that Mr. D. Archer is entitled to the seat held by Hon. J. C. Archer.
