A Good Day at Swett, June 10, 1857

We challenge the candid and self-respecting citizens of California to go to Swett's store in San Francisco, and deposit their votes on the following bill, the object of which is to establish a body of mechanics engaged in the manufacture of clothing, so as to render that part of the country more independent of the manufacturers in the North, and to render the woolen制造业 more profitable to the people of this State.

The business of manufacturing clothing is now carried on in this State by a number of foreigners, who have established factories in the cities of San Francisco and Sacramento, and are now engaged in the manufacture of clothing for the people of the State. The object of the bill is to establish a body of mechanics engaged in the manufacture of clothing, so as to render that part of the country more independent of the manufacturers in the North, and to render the woolen manufacturing more profitable to the people of this State.

The bill provides for the establishment of a body of mechanics engaged in the manufacture of clothing, so as to render that part of the country more independent of the manufacturers in the North, and to render the woolen manufacturing more profitable to the people of this State.

The business of manufacturing clothing is now carried on in this State by a number of foreigners, who have established factories in the cities of San Francisco and Sacramento, and are now engaged in the manufacture of clothing for the people of the State. The object of the bill is to establish a body of mechanics engaged in the manufacture of clothing, so as to render that part of the country more independent of the manufacturers in the North, and to render the woolen manufacturing more profitable to the people of this State.