The Daily Picaroon.
WHERE IS THE RESPONSIBILITY?

The mails are just beginning to bring us the details, as published in the Northern journals, of the outbreak at Harper's Ferry, the sudden rising and the instant suppression of the slave insurrection.

They are very copious, but they add little to our knowledge of the cause of the conspiracy or the degree of support which it had. It is inexplicable and mysterious, especially the organization of arms and ammunition, which, if they are correctly described, must have cost large sums and been transported from a considerable distance. Reports speak of dozens of correspondence with noted abolitionists and proofs of concert with notorious men in the Northern and Western States. This is, however, the most striking point, at least it sufficiently satisfies the mind, and in such grave matters we must not rest anything involving terrible and monstrous suspicion or rumor.

There is enough in the ascertained facts to convince us that immediate arrest of all who are connected with the plot, and the arrest of all who have been against individuals without full proof, and we do not doubt that the investigation will be prosecuted with zeal and thoroughness.

There is now no escape. The assessment of the rebellion is made. The country is prepared to meet it. The consequences of the plot are certain. The country is once more united as a nation.

There has been collection with, or at least promises of collection with, the number of slaves in the Northern and Western States, among persons in various parts of the country. The press is eavesdropping, the weights in the Northern and Western States, the slaves who have not been difficult matters of consideration.

There is a great deal of this evidence is very slight, and it must be dealt with prudence and caution.

An overwhelming force could be brought against any possible number of insurgents in the shortest possible time; the measures for the purpose were so ably executed as to prevent any possible resistance to the authorities. But it is difficult to believe that the rebels have been part of a conspiracy. The country is now united against the slaveholding states.

We, therefore, have no reason to believe this report. It is therefore not necessary to consider this report as having any foundation in fact. The correspondence of the insurrectionists is, in the judgment of the authorities, a combination of authoritative men. And in the light of this view, we are persuaded to join in praising the government for its treatment of the insurrectionists.

Enthusiasm and desperation may be the only weapons with which they have made their choice, but there will be few, and they will be repulsed by the brave sentiments of the insurrectionists. The slaves leaders will prompt them in every respect to be as inexcusable folly, what they will not join in denomination as a crime against human suffering. And in the light of this view, we are persuaded to join in praising the government for its treatment of the insurrectionists.

report that any considerable number of responsible, influential persons in the Northern States can be found to have been identified, or advising parties to this insurrectionary movement.

Enthusiasts and desperadoes may brave the popular indignation by proclaiming their sympathy with the insurgents, but these will be few, and they will be reprimanded by the honest sentiments of the mass of all parties. Even the policy of the ancrasy brand leaders will prompt them to repudiate the insurrection, and join in denouncing as a crime against impartiality and justice—against society and government. And in this point of view, in presenting to the Northern eye a vitory of the insurgent cause. The spectre of the wicked, the wretched of the preachers and theodores, which designed merely to catch a popular current, and thereby reach power and office, lead to sedition, social convulsions, hopeless infection and bloodshed. And we feel that expected good may come out of a great and frightful calamity.

The insurgents at Harper's Ferry may be repudiated as madmen or fools, but who made to assume? What misled them, if they were misled? Or inspired them with such abarded expectations and fanatic hopes, if they to think that overthrowing the insurgation of a great State by such feeble means, and with what result, will come to understand.

The insurgent leader—Brown—appears to have been a desperado in Kansas; one who had learned in the conflicts, stimulated by Northern capacity for power in that distracted

Territory, an intense hatred of Southern men and institutions and a burning desire to intend for his back, and filled with these passions, to have bent his whole mind to the object of continuing, in every imaginable way, the war on the South, which was consummated in the assault on Harper's Bridge, and sympathizes doubtless found, for the fever of fanaticism is contagious; and to a mind once set in the pursuit of an object, in which the passions were deeply interested, aliment for his hopes was easily found in the frantic tone of the Northern anti-slavery preacher, and the proclamation by the leaders of a great party of "an irreparable conflict" between the North and the South, which he felt himself called, as a leader of the guardian. Perhaps he believed himself a chief, to whom the great multitudes who cheer so tumultuously the political oracles of the North, who, as he supposed, was the moral defender of the nation against the South, would rally and make him the Pater of a new crusade, more fortunate than his prototype. Whether infamed to unreasoning madness, or deluded by his hopes, is easy to discern in the speeches of such as he.

Now this is the very serious question, which the men of the North who are not inconceivable to understand. So far as we can estimate, we believe, a large numerical majority—will be apt to put them to themselves and to each other when they read of such things as have transpired at Harper's Ferry, and that the irritation of disturbance and the prejudice of an entire great community, fearfully aggrivated by the uncertainties which threaten with unimagined terror, about a subject in which so many of the tenderest interests of life and property—suddenly broken and engulfed with such a stir of bloodshed; these cruel seductions of the victims of a false passion into suffering and pain, and the power of the whole race; the insults, the losses, and the consequences, are but the legitimate growth of the ultraism which has been permitted to continue...

gain such an ascendency over the minds of the Northern people, and have been made more powerful and more dangerous by being used as the means by which aspiring politicians and selfish demagogues seek to ride into power and office. The fools that became the criminals and have perished in their folly, as all such will do when they fling themselves against the ramparts with which the South can protect itself against this incendiarism, are themselves victims of those false teachers, who are themselves morally guilty of the very offenses they would depudate entirely, and responsible for the consequences they may affect to deplore. They are guilty of all the mischief done by the firebrands with which they have armed the headless and the wicked.

There is no apprehension in the Southern States that the designs of their enemies can be accomplished by such means as those of which the Harper's Ferry revolt is an example. Forewarned, they are capable of perfect self-protection against this species of aggression. But they are unwilling to be put to the universal necessity of the rigorous measures of precaution which this state of things, if continued and extended, would require, and they are anxious to live in peace with their Northern neighbors, instead of being entangled with them as natural enemies. If we are to live together in kindness, the temper and practices which have incited the disorders must be changed, and those who indulge in them or connive at them, and to whose rash teachings the insane excesses are distinctly traceable as their sources, must be rebuked by public opinion, in that way in which a rebuke will be most keenly felt, in the overturning of their political fortunes, and their banishment from station, as the expoucements of Northern opinions.

If such a consummation is ever to be effected, and we have our hopes that it is within the reach of a full, earnest and honest struggle, by the constitutional men of the North acting together, it must be rapidly advanced by such developments as those in Virginia, of the tendencies of the doctrines which are taught in the journals of the extreme partisans press, and proclaimed by the anti-slavery press; and thus out of the present evil may be plucked the germ of a great good.
