spiracy would develop. But what we do know is, that violent journals at the North do sympathize with these ruffians; and what we cannot fail to see is, that this incendiary attempt, though rejected as unwise, and bewailed as a blunder, is the legitimate result of the teachings of Northern pulpits, the plat forms of Northern politicians, and the fervent declamations of favorite Northern statesmen.

Now it is not of so much importance to know who favored directly the plot that has failed, and is repudiated as a failure, as it is to know who is for the continuance of this warfare, in its widest sense; who are disposed to go on, and how far, in this anti-Southern crusade, which heats up desperate minds to such shocking excesses; how far the judgment, the conscience, and the patriotism of the North will permit them to tolerate the class of men as their leaders who have voluntarily, by participation or connivance, by actual aid or criminal silence, encouraged the atrocious scheme of robbery, sedition and murder, the saturnalia of blood and rapine, which Brown sought to create in Virginia; and how far they will continue to permit themselves to be misled by the demagogues of the pulpit, the stump, and the legislative chambers, by whose visionary doctrines, wild exhortations, and fiery denunciations, the popular mind has been heated to a frenzied hatred of the South, and their ignorant and desperate followers made to believe that they are doing a righteous work, and earning great rewards, besides the little private gains they can pick up for themselves in the disorders they create.

Here is the real lesson to be drawn from the Harper's Ferry outbreak: It is a solemn appeal to the North to consider well what it owes to the South, to the constitution, and to our common country, in its dealings with the Harper's Ferry rioters, and their counsellors, abettors and teachers.

The response thus far, to this inquiry, is encouraging to the hope that the great body of the Northern people are awaking to the peril of the position into which they have been unwittingly drawn, by unprincipled and selfish men. May the event justify the hope, in the dismissal of the mischief makers from the post of leaders, and the restoration of a constitutional rule of order, for the faction and frenzy which has brought the country into its present state of discord and danger.

Our thanks are due to Mr. McKeever, of Adams's Express, for New York and other papers, in advance of the mail.
