FOR JOHN BROWN.

A story of the middle ages is, somewhere, told after the fashion: In those days, when a man was in debt, and did not clear his debts in kind, he was not liable to any legal process, but had to answer for his breach of promise. In such a case, a writ was issued for a fine, and if the defendant did not pay, he was committed to jail. If he remained there for a certain number of days, he was to be sold as a slave.

The captain, who had escaped, and was hiding in the woods, was consequently the object of a search. He was captured, and sentenced to be whipped in chains. The sentence was carried out, and the captain was never heard of again.

Some time later, a free negro, named John Brown, was captured, and sentenced to be whipped in chains. He was whipped, and then set at liberty.

Now from the free States comes a most interesting story. The negro, named John Brown, was a free negro, and a free negro was set at liberty. There is no discrimination in this case, as the negro was set at liberty, and no distinction is made between a free negro and a slave. The negro was wandering about in the woods, and was captured and sentenced to be whipped in chains. He was whipped, and then set at liberty.

CORRESPONDENCE OF THE PICAYUNE.

Letter from Jackson.

Friend Picayune:—You write of our quiet city this week, how our people have been assembled for the week, and that there was an old bachelor who was sitting at his writing desk, a quiet room where he was sure to produce; but now, he has gone over the spirit of his work. He sits at my writing table, a quiet room where he is sure to produce. But now, he has come over the spirit of his work. He sits at my writing table, a quiet room where he is sure to produce.
