

4-1-2018

Now: Reflection on Furman as it is now

Javonia Davis '21
Furman University

Follow this and additional works at: <https://scholarexchange.furman.edu/furman-magazine>

Recommended Citation

Davis, Javonia '21 (2018) "Now: Reflection on Furman as it is now," Furman Magazine: Vol. 61 : Iss. 1 , Article 10.
Available at: <https://scholarexchange.furman.edu/furman-magazine/vol61/iss1/10>

This Regular Feature is made available online by Journals, part of the Furman University Scholar Exchange (FUSE). It has been accepted for inclusion in Furman Magazine by an authorized FUSE administrator. For terms of use, please refer to the FUSE Institutional Repository Guidelines. For more information, please contact scholarexchange@furman.edu.

OLLI member Nancy Story enjoys a class, Six Centuries of the Book, taught by Furman Special Collections Librarian Jeffrey Makala.

OLLI students use the computer lab for courses like Beginning Computer for the Terrified, Safe Computing: Practical Security and Privacy, Enhancing Your Online Skills, Windows 10, and Adobe Lightroom, social media classes and more.

with a course that guides seniors on how they can make a difference.”

Several graduates of Senior Leaders Greenville have gone on to be elected to South Carolina’s Silver Haired Legislature, an advocacy group that works with the state legislature to address a variety of issues facing South Carolina.

OLLI member Margaret Clark helped to launch Senior Leaders Greenville. “This program provides a vehicle for retirees to learn more about what the issues are and where they can apply their talents – a win-win for the community and the individual,” says Clark.

Adds Kennedy, “The larger message with OLLI is that retirement doesn’t translate to stagnation. You should never stop learning or being an advocate for your peers, and OLLI provides an outlet for that voice and a means to make a difference.” ●

To learn more about OLLI, visit furman.edu/olli.

NOW

Reflection on Furman as it is now

At the start of my freshman year at Furman, I had an idea of how my four years were going to play out. I am a member of Furman’s Direct Entry Program, which allows students to enter the University of South Carolina School of Medicine Greenville following completion of undergraduate studies. Five students were admitted into the program, and five were alternates. This is the first year of the partnership, so I was ecstatic to be one of the first five people chosen.

Because the direct entry program has a set GPA and course requirements, I entered college with a strict plan in mind. I spent weeks over the summer trying to find the “perfect” major for pre-med students, and I thought I knew which classes to take and in what order. Not surprisingly, things did not go as planned.

I thought I would be a biology major because I could complete both my prerequisites and major requirements at the same time. This idea quickly faded when I realized that college biology is very different from high school biology. The work was more intense, and the concepts went into far more detail. After just a few weeks, I was certain that biology was not the major for me. But during this time I developed a love for psychology, a class I just assumed would fill a requirement. I enjoyed everything I learned; the information stuck with me, and I wanted to learn more. This triggered some internal conflict because I felt I might be ruining my plans. I was certain that without biology I had no chance of staying on track for medical school. I immediately scheduled a meeting with both my academic and pre-health advisers. Together they assured me that I could major in something I enjoyed and still meet all of my necessary requirements. And as it turns out, psychology is a great choice for pre-med students.

Within a few months my plan changed for the better. I’m thankful that Furman gave me the opportunity to accomplish my goals while also ensuring that I make the most of my time here. My advisers have been supportive and helpful, and I can’t wait to see what surprises the future holds.

ABOUT THE AUTHOR

Javonia “Jay” Davis ’21 is a psychology major, a Paladin cheerleader and one of the first participants selected to the Furman University-University of South Carolina School of Medicine Direct Entry Program, which helps accepted Furman students chart a pathway to medical school.