1-1-2012

Arts programs, new partnerships to enhance community ties

Furman University

Follow this and additional works at: https://scholarexchange.furman.edu/furman-magazine

Recommended Citation
University, Furman (2012) "Arts programs, new partnerships to enhance community ties," Furman Magazine: Vol. 54 : Iss. 4 , Article 13.
Available at: https://scholarexchange.furman.edu/furman-magazine/vol54/iss4/13

This Article is made available online by Journals, part of the Furman University Scholar Exchange (FUSE). It has been accepted for inclusion in Furman Magazine by an authorized FUSE administrator. For terms of use, please refer to the FUSE Institutional Repository Guidelines. For more information, please contact scholarexchange@furman.edu.
Testimonies features first-person narratives

 donated funds to the Lilly Center. Edited by William Rogers, Bennette E. Gay Professor Emeritus of Literature, the book features essays adapted from talks delivered at Furman by James Canaday ’66, retired professor of English and humanities; Jenny Leeneste, retired English professor and former vice president for academic affairs and dean at Furman; and current Furman professors Carmela Eriqat (philosophy), Paula Gabbert (associate academic dean), David Gandolfo (philosophy), and David Rutledge (religion). The book’s preface states that the title was chosen “with the idea of reclaiming a powerful concept—that of a public testimony to a personal truth. A testimony is a first-person narrative that speaks of a significant life experience with which others can strongly identify. The life experience, while authentic and obviously unique to the individual who narrates the story, is often also emblematic of a larger set of social, economic, and political issues. A testimonial writer thus engages the reader’s sense of ethics and justice by telling a representative story that generally enriches the reader’s sense of ethics and justice by telling a representative story that generally

The Center for Vocational Reflection

of the University’s vocation, which includes six “personal explorations and discoveries on the vocation of being human.”

Edited by William Rogers, Bennette E. Gay Professor Emeritus of Literature, the book features essays adapted from talks delivered at Furman by James Canaday ’66, retired professor of English and humanities; Jenny Leeneste, retired English professor and former vice president for academic affairs and dean at Furman; and current Furman professors Carmela Eriqat (philosophy), Paula Gabbert (associate academic dean), David Gandolfo (philosophy), and David Rutledge (religion).

The book’s preface states that the title was chosen “with the idea of reclaiming a powerful concept—that of a public testimony to a personal truth. A testimony is a first-person narrative that speaks of a significant life experience with which others can strongly identify. The life experience, while authentic and obviously unique to the individual who narrates the story, is often also emblematic of a larger set of social, economic, and political issues. A testimonial writer thus engages the reader’s sense of ethics and justice by telling a representative story that generally enriches the reader’s sense of ethics and justice by telling a representative story that generally

The Center for Vocational Reflection

of the University’s vocation, which includes six “personal explorations and discoveries on the vocation of being human.”

Edited by William Rogers, Bennette E. Gay Professor Emeritus of Literature, the book features essays adapted from talks delivered at Furman by James Canaday ’66, retired professor of English and humanities; Jenny Leeneste, retired English professor and former vice president for academic affairs and dean at Furman; and current Furman professors Carmela Eriqat (philosophy), Paula Gabbert (associate academic dean), David Gandolfo (philosophy), and David Rutledge (religion).

The book’s preface states that the title was chosen “with the idea of reclaiming a powerful concept—that of a public testimony to a personal truth. A testimony is a first-person narrative that speaks of a significant life experience with which others can strongly identify. The life experience, while authentic and obviously unique to the individual who narrates the story, is often also emblematic of a larger set of social, economic, and political issues. A testimonial writer thus engages the reader’s sense of ethics and justice by telling a representative story that generally enriches the reader’s sense of ethics and justice by telling a representative story that generally

The Center for Vocational Reflection

of the University’s vocation, which includes six “personal explorations and discoveries on the vocation of being human.”

Edited by William Rogers, Bennette E. Gay Professor Emeritus of Literature, the book features essays adapted from talks delivered at Furman by James Canaday ’66, retired professor of English and humanities; Jenny Leeneste, retired English professor and former vice president for academic affairs and dean at Furman; and current Furman professors Carmela Eriqat (philosophy), Paula Gabbert (associate academic dean), David Gandolfo (philosophy), and David Rutledge (religion).

The book’s preface states that the title was chosen “with the idea of reclaiming a powerful concept—that of a public testimony to a personal truth. A testimony is a first-person narrative that speaks of a significant life experience with which others can strongly identify. The life experience, while authentic and obviously unique to the individual who narrates the story, is often also emblematic of a larger set of social, economic, and political issues. A testimonial writer thus engages the reader’s sense of ethics and justice by telling a representative story that generally enriches the reader’s sense of ethics and justice by telling a representative story that generally

The Center for Vocational Reflection

of the University’s vocation, which includes six “personal explorations and discoveries on the vocation of being human.”

Edited by William Rogers, Bennette E. Gay Professor Emeritus of Literature, the book features essays adapted from talks delivered at Furman by James Canaday ’66, retired professor of English and humanities; Jenny Leeneste, retired English professor and former vice president for academic affairs and dean at Furman; and current Furman professors Carmela Eriqat (philosophy), Paula Gabbert (associate academic dean), David Gandolfo (philosophy), and David Rutledge (religion).

The book’s preface states that the title was chosen “with the idea of reclaiming a powerful concept—that of a public testimony to a personal truth. A testimony is a first-person narrative that speaks of a significant life experience with which others can strongly identify. The life experience, while authentic and obviously unique to the individual who narrates the story, is often also emblematic of a larger set of social, economic, and political issues. A testimonial writer thus engages the reader’s sense of ethics and justice by telling a representative story that generally enriches the reader’s sense of ethics and justice by telling a representative story that generally

The Center for Vocational Reflection

of the University’s vocation, which includes six “personal explorations and discoveries on the vocation of being human.”

Edited by William Rogers, Bennette E. Gay Professor Emeritus of Literature, the book features essays adapted from talks delivered at Furman by James Canaday ’66, retired professor of English and humanities; Jenny Leeneste, retired English professor and former vice president for academic affairs and dean at Furman; and current Furman professors Carmela Eriqat (philosophy), Paula Gabbert (associate academic dean), David Gandolfo (philosophy), and David Rutledge (religion).

The book’s preface states that the title was chosen “with the idea of reclaiming a powerful concept—that of a public testimony to a personal truth. A testimony is a first-person narrative that speaks of a significant life experience with which others can strongly identify. The life experience, while authentic and obviously unique to the individual who narrates the story, is often also emblematic of a larger set of social, economic, and political issues. A testimonial writer thus engages the reader’s sense of ethics and justice by telling a representative story that generally enriches the reader’s sense of ethics and justice by telling a representative story that generally

The Center for Vocational Reflection

of the University’s vocation, which includes six “personal explorations and discoveries on the vocation of being human.”

Edited by William Rogers, Bennette E. Gay Professor Emeritus of Literature, the book features essays adapted from talks delivered at Furman by James Canaday ’66, retired professor of English and humanities; Jenny Leeneste, retired English professor and former vice president for academic affairs and dean at Furman; and current Furman professors Carmela Eriqat (philosophy), Paula Gabbert (associate academic dean), David Gandolfo (philosophy), and David Rutledge (religion).

The book’s preface states that the title was chosen “with the idea of reclaiming a powerful concept—that of a public testimony to a personal truth. A testimony is a first-person narrative that speaks of a significant life experience with which others can strongly identify. The life experience, while authentic and obviously unique to the individual who narrates the story, is often also emblematic of a larger set of social, economic, and political issues. A testimonial writer thus engages the reader’s sense of ethics and justice by telling a representative story that generally enriches the reader’s sense of ethics and justice by telling a representative story that generally

The Center for Vocational Reflection

of the University’s vocation, which includes six “personal explorations and discoveries on the vocation of being human.”

Edited by William Rogers, Bennette E. Gay Professor Emeritus of Literature, the book features essays adapted from talks delivered at Furman by James Canaday ’66, retired professor of English and humanities; Jenny Leeneste, retired English professor and former vice president for academic affairs and dean at Furman; and current Furman professors Carmela Eriqat (philosophy), Paula Gabbert (associate academic dean), David Gandolfo (philosophy), and David Rutledge (religion).

The book’s preface states that the title was chosen “with the idea of reclaiming a powerful concept—that of a public testimony to a personal truth. A testimony is a first-person narrative that speaks of a significant life experience with which others can strongly identify. The life experience, while authentic and obviously unique to the individual who narrates the story, is often also emblematic of a larger set of social, economic, and political issues. A testimonial writer thus engages the reader’s sense of ethics and justice by telling a representative story that generally enriches the reader’s sense of ethics and justice by telling a representative story that generally