Alum arranges for Furman roommate to get replacement diploma

When Hurricane Kena struck the Pacific Coast of Mexico in October 2002, Gabriela Marchesin '00 lost pretty much everything in the storm and its aftermath, including many personal effects that she had treasured.

She was able to rebuild her life, however, and today runs a successful spa, called Artepil, in Puerto Vallarta.

Gaby, who holds dual citizenship in Mexico and the United States, has also kept up with many of her college friends through the years. In February, she enjoyed a reunion with a Furman roommate, Emily Conlon Getz '99.

The reunion came about because Emily's husband, Steven Getz '99, an anesthesiology resident in Winston-Salem, N.C., had been invited to a medical conference in Puerto Vallarta. Knowing about the losses Gaby suffered in the hurricane, Emily, who teaches Spanish at Forsyth Technical Community College, wrote her friend, told her about their planned visit and asked what she missed most from the United States.

Gaby's response: photos. Virtually all of hers had been destroyed in the storm.

"She loved making scrapbooks in college," says Emily, "so I knew she was sad to lose all those mementoes."

Because Emily and Steve each had a set of Bonhomies from their student days, they decided to take the duplicates to Gaby to help refurbish her collection. Then Emily thought of something else: Why not see if Furman could provide a new diploma for Gaby?

Because she was making the request on someone else's behalf, Emily decided she should go straight to the top. This proved to be a smart move, as President David Shi responded to Emily's inquiry by immediately ordering a new diploma for Gaby. He shipped it to Emily with authorization to make the presentation as the university's representative.

The picture accompanying this story is ample proof of Gaby's delight at Emily's surprise. Gaby planned to frame her new diploma and hang it in her office.
